Note The adjustment tool icons change depending on what part of the adjustment tools you're in: Shapes, Scenes, Levels, Curves, Hue/Saturation, Brightness/Contrast, and Vibrance/Saturation, or V/S. Figure 4-4. The Image Adjustments dialog box includes all of the most commonly used adjustment tools that are hidden in the subheadings of the dialog box. To access this dialog box, double-click the color swatch in an image's color area (or drag it into the dialog box). The following list describes the panels and the adjustment tools. Most of the adjustment tools are selected by default in the panels that display them. If you're already in a panel and want to access an adjustment tool instead, just click the tool's icon. * Colors *. This panel (Windows) or tab (Macs) contains a color palette, as shown in Figure 4-4. The colors are displayed in a series of tabs in the palette window, which looks like the one shown on the right in Figure 4-5. The more tools you open in the Tools panel, the more tabs appear in the palette.

Lifestyle, sporting and arts events, as well as the more personal things in life, can be as rewarding as it is burdensome. In the end, it's all up to you whether to be thankful or ungrateful. I'm the one who makes it easy for myself to be thankful for everything I get from life. It's like I put my extra energy to give back to all the people and things I appreciate. Don't we all go through the same thing? And yet you may think that's not true, and that no one can read your mind. Wouldn't it be cool if you could be aware of the things you are thankful for even if your mind is not on this? Or maybe you have a difficult time at times to become aware of your thoughts? What would you do with this knowledge if you did? I know you probably already have your thoughts on everything to think about. Let's just say you always let it be easy for yourself not to let your thoughts interfere with your thankfulness. It may be that you have to dig deep to catch your thoughts and make yourself write and keep a record of all the things and people you are thankful for. There is much to be thankful for that it would make us feel overwhelmed, unless we have a routine and system to make it easier for ourselves. Jot down some things you may be thankful for that make you smile right away. Maybe it's a song, a quote, a thought or event that made you feel grateful. There is no rule here, all that matters is that this makes you feel better. It's all about finding the silver lining in life, and yes the dark clouds can appear, but they can't be taken as final, or as they can come in our life! Try to get past this negative way of thinking to appreciate the positive in life. Keep the things that make you happy and bring you up with you, and include them in your gratitude list. Start to slowly fill up your gratitude list while you are around people and things that make you smile, and start your routine to write down what you find and when you need to, by when the clock strikes five. The rest is really up to you, but maybe in the future you can figure out why you wrote it all down. Maybe you need to stop letting the thoughts interfere with your life, and

Lighting Most of my lighting is available from the sun or studio strobes. I prefer to use the soft box with the reflector when I am working with guests or if I am shooting at the groom's home. I also use a softbox when I am working with couples on a more formal wedding day. I most often use a Nikon SB 600 or Nikon SB 800 strobe or
