After going to sleep last night I got the first version of my site content filter and logo generator program up. You can see it at This is my first attempt at a serious programming project. I've been working on it the past few days. I found some basic examples online and have been modifying them to fit my needs. The program works as follows, It takes two files as input. One file is a list of domains to filter for and the other is the text you want to use in the first file. It then checks the domains in the first file, then searches the text you have provided in the second file and replaces the matching domains with a link to the page. For example, if you provide a list of five domains, and you want the "about us" section of your page to link to a page on your domain, the program will replace "www.yourdomain.com" with "www.yourdomain.com/aboutus.html". As a whole I like the program a lot. It works without errors and seems like it could be a powerful tool in the right hands. I would like some help from the community to get the look and feel right, but this version is functional and I'll be adding more features in the coming days. Also, I would like to expand the program to include a feature to replace any matching text between brackets, dashes, periods, and other characters. Thanks for looking! 08-15-2007, 10:30 AM spinspace First version 1.4 is released! I have added a number of new features since version 1.3. The latest update includes a number of minor changes and bug fixes. Version 1.4 of the program is available for download. I have added a number of new features since version 1.3. It is also known that, in such a steering apparatus, an electrically operated parking brake operates so as to apply a braking force to the input shaft by way of a friction braking means via a brake cable which is mechanically connected to a caliper for pressing a disc against the input shaft. The friction braking means (brake pad, etc.) is interposed between the brake cable and the input shaft and operates by being driven to frictionally engage with the input shaft. This means that the brake cable has to be connected to the friction braking means in a non-contact manner. In Japanese Patent Application Publication No. 2001-272423, it is disclosed that the parking brake cable is connected to the friction braking means by way of a bush provided with a through-hole, a bolt and a nut which are tightened to cause the rotational engagement of the bolt with respect to the bush, and a bolt stopper which restricts the rotation of the nut. Moreover, in Japanese Patent Application Publication No. 2004-250600, it is disclosed that a stud hole is formed in the surface of a nut and that the brake cable is inserted through the hole to allow a frictional engagement of the stud and the brake cable and a frictional engagement of the nut and the brake cable. In the configuration of the steering apparatus disclosed in Japanese Patent Application Publication No. 2001-272423, the brake cable is connected to the friction braking means by way of the bush provided with the through-hole, the bolt and the nut which are tightened to cause the rotational engagement of the bolt with respect to the bush. However, when the nut is not tightened sufficiently to cause the rotational engagement of the bolt with respect to the bush, then the rotation of the nut is restricted by the bolt stopper to prevent the brake cable from being connected to the friction braking means, and this may cause a reduction in the force with which the brake cable is connected to the friction braking means. This may lead to a failure of the braking action of the electrically operated parking brake in some cases. Moreover, because of the operation of tightening the
