Saturday, November 3, 2017 Shenzhen is a city in China located on the southeastern coast of the Pearl River delta. It is one of China's four major special economic zones and a major global center of electronics and hi-tech manufacturing. With the rapid economic growth, the city's economy is also one of the biggest in China. Shenzhen is also known for its widespread unemployment and poverty, which has led to residents from different areas migrating to the city in search of jobs. This has made Shenzhen one of the fastest growing cities in the world, with almost 16 million people. Therefore, it is no wonder why Shenzhen has turned out to be a major tourist destination. In this post, we'll be looking at some of the best tourist attractions in Shenzhen. #1 Chek Lap Kok Airport In addition to being one of the fastest growing cities, Shenzhen is also growing in infrastructure. The airport is one of those major infrastructure projects, and it should be done by the year 2030. More so, Shenzhen is also known for its airport in the making, which has made the airport its most prominent and exciting tourist attraction. While some people still wonder why such an airport would be built in a

Send emojis to Twitter and Facebook. Keyboard macros are very useful tools that can help you make your day-to-day work easier and save you a lot of time. Using a keyboard macro is very simple, all you have to do is write a few words and press a few buttons (or rather, just press some keys on your keyboard). What's more, Macros can be used in any application that allows macros, and they'll work regardless of the application's developer. So let's say you're making an automatic speech recording application (that is, an app that allows users to record themselves talking into the microphone), and you want to allow them to type in the name of the person they're recording into the "To" field of the tweet automatically, without the need to write it by hand. You could set a keyboard macro in your app that will automatically populate the "To" field, by typing in the name of the person, with the name of the person automatically being appended to the tweet. Why would you want to do that? Because then you wouldn't have to manually write the name of the person you're talking into the field every time you want to send a tweet. You could just go to your Macros, create a new macro and, voilà! Done. Let's take another example: Say you're an application developer, and you want to allow your users to automatically talk in your application, one of the features that you want to add in your app is the ability to automatically create a list of tweets for the person you're talking into the app. You can set a keyboard macro in your application that will automatically place the name of the person you're talking into the tweet into the "To" field, the name of the person automatically being appended to the tweet. The ability to automatically add a keyword to the "To" field is a keyboard macro feature that is rarely implemented in apps, or at least, if it is, it's only implemented by very big and famous app developers. Why should you be the only one? It allows you to save yourself a lot of time, because you don't need to type in the keyword manually in the app's "To" field every time you want to send a tweet, and you can write your application so that it automatically adds the keyword to the "To" field. So, why would you need to do that? Because it helps you speed up your workflow a lot, and saves
