With a conventional layered material substrate, as shown in FIG. 1, an adhesive 2 is disposed on a first surface 1a of a first layered material layer 1A, while a second surface 1b of the first layered material layer 1A is disposed to face a substrate 3, and a second layered material layer 1B is disposed on the second surface 1b of the first layered material layer 1A, such that an adhesive portion 4 is formed. Therefore, a layered material substrate having such a structure is formed. When the layered material substrate is bonded with the substrate 3 by using such an adhesive portion 4, since there is a small gap between the first layered material layer 1A and the substrate 3, if an extraneous substance 5 is caught in the gap, the extraneous substance 5 may be caught between the adhesive layer 2 and the first layered material layer 1A. Therefore, if a problem of the extraneous substance 5 caught between the adhesive layer 2 and the first layered material layer 1A is generated, an inspection for the problem is necessary. To inspect an adhesion fault, an operator manually inspects the adhesive portion 4 of the layered material substrate by using a microscope, wherein the operator checks whether the extraneous substance 5 is caught between the adhesive layer 2 and the first layered material layer 1A. However, if the adhesive layer 2 and the first layered material layer 1A are extremely thin, it is very difficult to check the adhesive portion 4 with the naked eye. Further, if a grain of the adhesive layer 2 is very small, the operator cannot check the adhesive portion 4 with the naked eye, while the operator becomes more conscious to see the adhesive portion 4. Therefore, a burden of the operator is increased when the operator checks the adhesive portion 4 with the naked eye. Further, in the conventional method of inspecting a region of the adhesive layer 2, the operator visually checks whether or not the extraneous substance 5 caught in the adhesive layer 2 is smaller than a predetermined size, and the operator then judges whether or not
