Free cache software lets you view web browser cache, and view websites and c...In the 1880s, the French city of Lyon was home to a flourishing silk industry. While the production of other textiles was on the decline in the mid-1900s, the silk industry was still a big part of the local economy. The silk industry was still growing at the beginning of the 20th century and it seemed as though the silk industry was poised to be a major contributor to the local economy for many years to come. But the industry suddenly began to decline and never recovered. The silk industry was such an important part of the local economy that when the factory closed down in 1909, the city considered creating a monument to honor the industry and remember its rich history. The city decided to create a sculpture depicting a woman's back in a beautiful pose. Since the silk industry was in decline, the sculptures were made of plaster of Paris rather than silk. In the early 1900s, plaster was a cheaper and more realistic way of creating sculptures since making art out of silk was so expensive. The models for the back piece were created in Paris and brought to Lyon. In order to make it easier to transport the sculptures, the city of Lyon decided to mold a plaster statue out of the model, but rather than create a single statue, they created two. One was mounted on a large plaque that was inscribed with a specific passage of text that described the history of the silk industry. The sculpture was placed near the city's former silk factory where the models were created. When the city bought the former factory, it didn't want the original sculpture. Instead, the city of Lyon decided to sell the plaster sculptures instead. They later mounted the statue on the side of the building. The plaster sculpture of the woman's back was donated to the Musee Regional des Arts in Lyon. It has been on display in the museum since 1980. The model of the woman's back can still be found today in a private museum in Lyon. Although the statue is currently on display, it is estimated that it has been stored in the museum for many years. Some believe the statue may have been stolen and taken to Paris in the 1930s. According to local legend, when the city was planning to move the statue, the people who were in charge of storing it tried to steal it. They were chased away by a force of ghosts that haunted the building. At the end
