The government wants to introduce a national code of practice for the use of the tablets, as part of its plans to encourage children to "become digitally literate and educated in lifelong learning", education secretary Nicky Morgan said. The new code of practice is part of a government pledge to enforce its agenda of digital literacy for its children. Mr Morgan said: "Digital technology is here to stay. Students will need to use technology more to succeed in a 21st Century education. "This code helps to ensure that all schools adopt the best practice to suit their needs and that students get the most out of the technology available in their classrooms. "We're working with the technology sector to find ways to help schools achieve their aims, while protecting young people's safety." A number of schools, including Dulwich College and Framlingham College, have already introduced use of the iPad in the classroom. Older students at a secondary school in Newcastle are now using technology more than ever before, according to a new report from the National Union of Teachers. Cited in the report were improvements that had been seen in attainment levels among pupils since

Full Version pc Game.SACRAMENTO — Republicans and Democrats didn't agree on much, but they did manage to unite in one crucial way: They opposed a gas-tax repeal. At least for now. In the final hours of the legislative session that started Tuesday, both parties successfully pushed off a challenge by Republicans to renew California's gas tax, which has not been increased since the 1990s. Their efforts appeared to be successful when the Assembly approved a package of bills extending the vehicle license fees and gas-tax increase — along with a change that would keep the state Department of Transportation on track to receive the nearly $50 million it has requested to make repairs to the state's aging highway network. By a vote of 30-27, the Assembly cleared the way for the Senate to take up the remaining bills later Tuesday. Republicans who had unsuccessfully fought for the referendum on Proposition 6 by way of a maneuver by which they could sustain a veto challenge if they make it to the governor's desk, won their goal. But in a state Capitol where an alliance between Republicans and Democrats has seemed strained at times in recent years, observers had expected Republicans to push more aggressively to repeal the tax and hold off on pushing the additional debt until next year, when voters could consider it on the ballot in November. "In a session where there have been so many good bills passed and bills fought to death, the gas-tax bill did not get that kind of a fight," said Assemblywoman Hannah-Beth Jackson, D-Santa Barbara, the bill's author. The Assembly package of bills will now be forwarded to Gov. Gavin Newsom, who said in a statement that he would "review" the package before deciding whether to act on it. "I've never been a big fan of increasing taxes and fees or raising existing taxes," he said. In an interview before the vote, Newsom said raising taxes
