MyNavicom, Inc. Mon, 05 Apr 2017 17:05:28 EST Fewer people bought cars in the most recent model year. Should that change the auto market?

THE NATION | NEW YORK (AP) - So far this year auto dealers have reported accelerating sales growth, fueled by consumer demand and interest in more fuel-efficient vehicles. But the latest sales report that came out Monday shows the sales pace for light vehicles -- the big trucks, vans, SUVs, and minivans often used as family cars -- has decreased by 0.1 percent in 2016, the first decrease in a trio of annual sales reports. It is part of a gradual drop in auto sales of 0.7 percent to 2.5 percent since last year.

The first sales decline for 2016 was reported just before last week's start of the new model year. Though the new year was dead on arrival, the sales decline should not portend a full-blown recession. Still, the latest data underlines the challenges facing auto makers in stabilizing the industry amid declining U.S. sales and President-elect Donald Trump's calls for making cars more fuel-efficient.

The National Automobile Dealers Association reported on Monday that its members saw sales fall in calendar year 2016 to new and pre-owned vehicles. Insurance and finance companies also posted a slight sales decline. NADA's figures include new car sales but exclude used vehicles.

For more than a decade, the industry has assiduously expanded financial incentives for buyers of new cars. And model
