AFTERWORD.

Translation is no longer a main focus in Dragon Quest IX, this time taking up an eighth of the game. This is because we felt that focusing on a new challenge would provide a more enjoyable experience for players who liked testing their power in difficult situations. This is not to say that the translation is bad. Since there is an eighth of the text missing, it's actually quite difficult to translate. Although part of the text is in kanji (made up of Chinese characters), the characters require an almost equally high level to read and a high Japanese knowledge. To be honest, there are people in the company who know only Japanese, but even they found it difficult.

In addition to the missing text, we have eliminated the "Real Chocobo" and Flow Motion (now the "Always Flow") combo moves, or "Flow Gauge," as it is referred to in the game. In the previous games we aimed for a realistic motion that you would use with a real animal, while attracting the attention of a lot of players. This time we focused on the feeling of flying with magic, and a combo move that would only be used at a particular moment would disrupt this. Even those "Flow Gauge" attacks are rather poorly made with artificial fireworks, which is not what we wanted to express. So, rather than continuing to aim for that, we chose to "cut back on the shine" to make the game appear more "authentic."

As for the EXP you gain when you defeat enemies, since it is now expressed in terms of actions taken (rather than HP), we realize that it will become difficult for the users who play in their high level characters to obtain more points than they would usually get. However, we also realize that this will frustrate users who play heroes at a low level. We have taken such things into consideration, and will continue to strive for balance. We are also looking forward to hearing your feedback on this.

Link's dreams seemed to be closer to reality when he battled a monster in this forest. However, the rest of the story will unfold as he journeys to the forest a second time to slay the gigantic beast. Character Creation: HOW TO RAGE: Get yourself a blue lantern and a blue legendary sword. Set items with a blue lantern on your hotbar, equip your best sword and go to a dungeon. If you find a high level monster, upgrade your sword to the top level (of course you have the money for it). Keep doing this until you have maxed out the hotbar. Once you have maxed out all of your items, set a high level legendary sword on your hotbar and go to a dungeon. When you get into the dungeon, check your hotbar and start upgrading it. You will get a +10 bonus to your damage each time you equip a level up sword. Keep upgrading until it says "sword level 256". When it does, equip it on your hotbar. If the item is currently unequipped on your hotbar, you can still upgrade it with the +10 damage. Try to get a high level legendary sword. It is the best way to get a blue lantern! HOW TO SURVIVE: Use spikes and shields to protect yourself. Don't let yourself get hit. Use ranged weapons when they are available. With your sword equipped and all of your items maxed
