I own a textbook to read in preparation for the AP Statistics exam but I've noticed some things that are a bit confusing, so I'd love to get some ideas of how I should proceed through the chapter. I have a copy of the book text printed on paper, like the image below. It has two sections: In the top half, it lists a bunch of topics on the left side and then has what seems to be a set of questions on the right side. I have very little experience with the AP exam and I'm unsure how I should proceed through the chapter like this. I'm assuming I should read the left side, highlight the top of the right side, and then copy the bottom part and continue to go through it until the end of the book. Is that a reasonable assumption?
