The improvement in pharmacological properties of hydrophobic drugs by new strategies of compound design has been demonstrated. However, a common limitation of such strategies is the need to overcome changes in the mechanical properties of these compounds due to the modification of their chemical structure. In this work, a new method for new drug design has been tested with respect to mechanical properties. The presence of a polar function in the chemical structure of an interesting compound has been exploited as a new strategy for decreasing the melting point without changing other properties. The objective of this work was to evaluate changes in mechanical stability of anhydrous caffeic acid with the introduction of hydroxyl and amine groups on its chemical structure. Mechanical stability was tested using a novel method using the dynamic cold crystallization test. Data obtained from DSC curves were used to establish the nucleation points on the cooling curves. The shift of the peak to

System Requirements:

We highly recommend playing the game on 1080p monitors with high refresh rate (120Hz or 144Hz) and at least 60 FPS on Low/Mid settings. We also recommend playing on monitors with at least a 1920 x 1080 resolution and 16:9 ratio. We understand that some setups may not support higher resolutions and ratios, however, we strive to support the latest hardware available. The minimum hardware specs to run Vynil Hunter are: CPU: AMD FX-9300 AMD FX-9300 Graphics Card: Radeon HD 7900 Series or GeForce GTX
