* Part of using Photoshop effectively and getting the most out of it is to learn how to organize your images into various collections to make it easy to find the exact image you want to use in your designs. If you're an experienced Photoshop user, you'll also need to learn to use Photoshop's many different brushes, gradients, and other tools to create the perfect illustration, photo, or collage for your scrapbook pages. Figure 3-3: The workspace for an Adobe Photoshop image manipulation project. Figure 3-3 shows the workspace that I set up for a video project. I created several layers to align and position my photo elements and then stacked them as layers on top of one another. I also grouped some of the layers together to make it easier to edit them, and then I made the group editable so I could toggle between layers. Organizing Scrapbook Pages The best way to file your images for use in your scrapbooks is to go through your image-editing programs and store them in a folder structure that makes sense. The end result of this process should be a folder that resembles the folder shown in Figure 3-4. (This process can be automated with the Files | Organize | Folder dialog found in most of the programs listed in Table 3-1.) Figure 3-4: Use a folder structure that organizes the images you use for scrapbook projects. In the process, you'll have one main folder for each photo album, plus extra folders (a year, event, etc.) for individual photos. Using Photoshop Elements, you can create folders automatically by dragging an image onto the Organize folder icon in the Files area on the toolbar. You can also use the Organize | Folders dialog to create the following folders: * One folder for all photos in the album: Photos * One folder for all products: Products * One folder for all albums: Albums * One folder for all projects: Projects If you use multiple projects, organize them into a subfolder named Projects. For example, I organize my scrapbooking and photography work under the Projects subfolder. The pattern I use is as follows: album/year/photo_number.jpg (or photo_number.jpg) In this example, the album name is Sudden Surrender Scrapbook, the year is 2008, and photo no. 1

Q: compilation with vim on windows I know there are several similar questions out there but somehow all the answers don't work for me so I have to ask my question here. I started to learn vims and tried to configure it the way it should be using :h map- and :h but it doesn't really work. What I want is C/X into an empty buffer C/X into the current buffer C/X into a new file The only solution I found was to open the buffer with :e and then :. Every time I try to use :e it gives me an error "E355: Invalid argument". I read the answer in the Vim question here: vim opening file with error"E355" but it does not solve my problem. My vimrc file includes the following commands : let g:vim_visualmode = 1 set b set filetype=msc set completion=backspace set wrapmargin=0 set nobomb set autoindent " set hlsearch " set incsearch " set conceal set mouse=a I changed my.vimrc file so I could compile vim with gvim. I did this by telling it to edit a plugin file (run with: gvim -u gvim_plugin.so) since it was only allowing me to use 'echo'. What I want is to use: gvim -u gvim_plugin.so and also be able to use other plugins besides echo without having to compile it or do anything weird. A: You don't need to call the builtin gvim at all. You can call the compiled executable directly. Just ensure that your /bin/bash (or whatever shell you use) is set to allow execution of /opt/gvim/bin/gvim from this location. gvim -u gvim_plugin.so If you really want to get rid of the builtin gvim, you can specify that in your.vimrc with : command gvim call gvim --no-install That might break some plugins, though. But you could try a different terminal application instead. I use
