Q: React router : Is there a standard way to use Navigation from a private page? I'm new to React. I was looking into the react router documentation and found a section on loading components on a private route. From the example : This works great. My question is this : Is there any way to have more than one route without having to give it an index as part of the path? Something like : The documentation I found for the static routes states that you can use something like this for private routes but I haven't been able to figure out how. A: The main things you need to do is that you have to have all three routes as children of the component and you have to pass down the same context: import React, {useContext} from 'react' import { Switch, Route, Redirect } from 'react-router-dom' export const App = () => { const { navigate } = useContext( React.RouteContext ) return (

Kit Available to Buy From Mini Roll James Davison's name has been removed from World Rugby's rankings, significantly raising the possibility that he will be able to return for England in June World Rugby have announced that the next British and Irish Lions team to wear a chartered 2018/19 kit will be announced on Monday 15 November The Lionesses have this Tuesday 10 November to register for their 2018/19 comp. Kit, currently available to buy from main.wheresworldrugby.com but will be shortly to expand into retail stores, as soon as they receive their allocation by the manufacturers' agencies, while the strip chartered for the first Lions tour since 1993 is already available to buy from the kitman at retail.com. Regular British and Irish Lions kits are automatically chartered after a busy summer of emerging rugby nations - a calendar year before June's tour and the next one - and players are able to apply to wear the Lions' home, away and away alternate jerseys not only for this tour, but from the next annual tour in 2019, after their selection in 2018. The Whitley Award winners, the 39 Lions players in the squads who have worn a British and Irish Lions' jersey during the home, away and away series to date, are as follows: *Jonny Wilkinson and Phil Vickery, both of whom wore the Test jersey for Wales in the 1995 and 1999 series, opened the current format for Lions number 1 jerseys, with Mo Farah and Joe Calzaghe becoming the first double winners, having worn the Lions' home and away jerseys against France in 2009. Here's the statement from World Rugby on the Lions jerseys introduction. In announcing the introduction of the new Lions jerseys in 2017, World Rugby noted the significance of the Lions wearing a specific design for the first time in 24 years. The announcement was met with great enthusiasm from supporters and from the management of the Lions. It was clear that the reaction to the new 2017 Lioness shorts has been extremely positive. Four years and one month after announcing the latest in our ever-evolving kit lifecycle,
