Note that Adobe Photoshop Elements, a beginner's version of Photoshop, is available for Windows and Mac users. Photoshop's Interface Photoshop's interface is laid out to enable easy editing using layers. The user work area of Photoshop is divided into an image window and a workspace window. The image window shows the image that's currently being worked on, and the workspace window shows the user any temporary layers (layers that you've created but haven't yet applied to the image) and often the Undo History, which is a history of your previous actions that you can revisit. Figure 13-1 shows the default interface of Photoshop. Figure 13-1 The default interface of Photoshop. To save time while you work on an image, you may find that Photoshop has a tendency to hide the workspace window, making it impossible to see what you're doing. Figure 13-2 shows the workspace window after it's been hidden. Figure 13-2 The workspace window with Photoshop's Editor and Browser windows hidden. Applying and using Photoshop's Layers A layer in Photoshop is simply an editable unit in an image that can be a transparency mask, image, or text and can be changed and edited, such as by changing its color, transparency, or size. Many of Photoshop's tools create a new layer, but it's also possible to work directly on the layer stack. Layers are an essential tool in the creation of your images. They provide a number of advantages, which we cover in this section. You can layer an image's individual elements, such as text, a drawing, or a picture. You can group them together to create compound layers such as contact sheets and batch layers, which we cover in Chapter 15. # Layers and Transparency Here are three reasons you might use layers and transparency: * The ability to add transparency * The ability to work on individual elements * The ability to create multiple layers * * Figure 13-3 shows the layers used to create a page layout of an album. The photo of the bride and groom is on top, and the backing paper is on the bottom layer. The back of the page was another layer in the same Photoshop file and was covered by the text layer at the bottom of the file. Figure 13-3 Using the Backdrop

Donna Stephanie says she's very glad to hear that you've found a good job. I'm sure she'd love to be able to take her daughter with her. However, we're a bit confused by Stephanie's question about how much it would cost to send her and her daughter to camp and as she's mentioned, it's not entirely clear to us that we have the responsibility to send her to camp. I'm not sure she's told Stephanie (although I know you guys have a good relationship) about how she's chosen to handle this but she certainly has a right to do as she pleases. It seems obvious, but this is the kind of issue I wish we had a good method for talking through, which we would do informally and not over email. Does anyone know of a good method that would work? Thanks, Barbara -----Original Message----- From: Hiliard, Marlene Sent: Thursday, July 19, 2001 4:53 PM To: Heard, Marie Subject: RE: Stephanie Wittmer: Camping Trip -- More Details Marie, I have discussed Stephanie's need for a camping trip with John Jones. John is immediately reminded of a business trip he took to Tennessee with his dad when he was a boy. The trip was taken at the suggestion of his father who was managing his father's petroleum interests in Tennessee at the time. The trip was organized by the employment office of the City that sponsored the business association to which he belonged. I do not recall the cost of the trip, but I do think it was minimal. Anyway, I believe John strongly feels that Stephanie needs this. His suggestion to me was that it would be wonderful for him to pay for it. He said that she could go the next week and he would reserve the trip for her. I am on vacation, so I have not set up the trip yet. But I certainly can do that for Stephanie. Yes, I really do not want to impose upon someone else. Marlene -----Original Message----- From: Heard, Marie Sent: Wednesday, July 18,

Annabelle 'Happy' Swings to New Terrain with Talk of 'Selfish' Fame "My mom always told me that a girl's destiny lies in her heart," she says. "And I'm really happy that I live by my heart and my passion. I don't have to be a selfish person. I don't have to let myself be defined by my marriage." "Happy" first shot to fame after sharing some of her nudes with RumorFix.com in September 2011. She posted a sizzling video of herself topless in a plush Jacuzzi that was shot by Juan Carlos. The video had nearly 800,000 views. "I didn't want to make money off of what I looked like," she told RumorFix. "I'm lucky, because I have the best husband. If I were a single girl, I would be making $10,000 a month. It's the lifestyle of a whore!" Happy, who lives in Los Angeles, finds creative inspiration from various sources. She learned from fashion designer Christian Siriano, who she had worked for. "He's the one that taught me how to put make up on a girl's face," she says. "I'm always watching his show, 'House of Fabulous.' He's the artist, not I." Happy loves fashion too, and credits it with helping her make it as a famous model. "Nothing promotes your story like a good dress. There's nothing more powerful than a great dress." She says the biggest misconception about her is that she is a "party girl." She denies the rumors, despite the reality star business, in which parties and hooking up are part of the life. "Nope, that wasn't my life at all. The nights were spent at home with my husband. I was at home with him every night and I was a very positive influence on him. My life was not sexually driven." She does admit to having one passion in her life. "I'm an avid reader of poetry," she says. "If you can make someone a better person with a paragraph, it makes it worthwhile." But she denies taking drugs, despite rumors that she has done crystal meth. "I will never speak ill of a family friend. I would never want her to think she is a druggie. I know she doesn't have the same beliefs as I do."The use of a semiautomatic
