Como personajes, el t3tulo de la obra tiene un significado anotado por la autora, apuntando a. This invention relates to high intensity discharge lamps, and particularly to a high intensity discharge lamp which is capable of producing a high luminous efficacy even when used under high lamp current conditions. High intensity discharge (HID) lamps, which can be used in place of arc lamps in many applications, are typically of the hot cathode type. At least one electrode structure, which is typically referred to as the cathode, provides electron emission from a heated cathode so as to initiate the discharge process. The electrode structure is supported at its end remote from the heated cathode, typically by a sealed discharge vessel, referred to as an anode cup. The anode cup is filled with a suitable discharge medium, typically a mixture of rare gas and a small amount of mercury, and is maintained at an elevated temperature. The electrodes are maintained at an appropriate electrical potential with respect to the
