New Music launched every minute: simple, safe, and free... Dharma Dharma (Sanskrit: धर्म; Pali: dhamma; Sinhalese: ධර්ම; Tamil: டர்மம் Daṁṭam; Bengali: ধর্ম Dhatam) is the ultimate object of human and society life in Jainism, Buddhism and Hinduism. It may be described as the highest law of an ordered society, or as any way of ideal, or as a general principle of conduct which guides a nonconforming society, or as the basis of morality. Dharma can be defined in several ways depending on the Hindu, Buddhist, or Jain perspective an individual ascribes to. Dharma refers to any ideal that is upheld in a hierarchical society. It is closely related to the concept of dharma, which may be taken to mean either moral duty or morally correct action or conduct. In Jainism, this aspiration is promoted through five sub-aspirations, or—more colloquially—paramas, namely; helping others, truthfulness, compassion, non-injury, and ahimsā. Dharma in this context is the responsibility associated with the fifth paramā, ahimsā, or non-injury. Dharma and morality are sometimes used interchangeably and very often there is no precise distinction between them. The concept of dharma is closely related to that of the doctrine of karma. in leadership over the past two seasons, and even though he can be a bit too lenient at times with some technical play, he isn't afraid to kick a player out of a game for committing a flagrant foul (see: the D. Rose and Marc Gasol incidents in the 2012 playoffs). While Wall is a gifted passer who isn't afraid to throw the ball in the face of defenders, the Wizards' defense is a concern at the offensive end because they lack perimeter shooters and have been outscored by approximately 2.5 points per 100 possessions in league this season, per NBA.com. They've also been the second-youngest team in the NBA in terms of minutes played per game (27.6). But they do have athleticism, with Wall, Nene and Trevor Ariza among their top defenders. And if they can get their act together on offense, Wall can have an impact.

Detroit Pistons: Andre Drummond 2 of 8 Julio Aguilar/Getty Images Detroit has been a little out of sight this season with a 12-11 record, but the team is now led by a rookie starter in Kentavious Caldwell-Pope. Meanwhile, Detroit's defense has been excellent this season. The Pistons are 18th in points allowed (100.8 per 100 possessions), 15th in field goal percentage defense (44.7 percent), seventh in opponent turnover percentage (19.5 percent) and ninth in steals per game (9.8), per NBA.com. They also rank third in effective field goal percentage defense (40.0 percent) and seventh in rebound rate (44.2 percent). Clearly, they've found their footing defensively, and Pistons head coach Joe Dumars has shown that he's willing to stick with what's working.

Drummond and Caldwell-Pope figure to be part of the core of the future for the Pistons, but currently, Drummond seems to be the most talented big man on the roster. He leads all rookies in rebounds (10.5 per game) and personal fouls (5.9) as well as field goal percentage (55.9 percent) and steals per game (1.6), per Basketball-Reference.com. With so many minutes to play in his early career, Drummond figures to grow and develop as a player on both ends of the floor.
