Game Art History In the late 1970s, Microsoft published the first of what would become a series of home/personal computer games. Called VisiCalc, the game "fed" and calculated an array of business and mathematical formulas on the player's display. Shortly thereafter, a young MIT student named Douglas C. Engelbart unveiled his "Mother of all Demos" (or "Mother of all Demos, First Draft") -- the mouse-pointer-equipped computer system for a shared workplace, which he hoped would reduce the time needed for programming. At Stanford University, the Xerox PARC (Palo Alto Research Center) team created the first commercial, network-enabled collaboration system, known as XDS.-i-o (read ` %d:%d-%d:%d.%d'`), or * `:c` (read ` %c'`), or `:ctime_secs` (read ` %cstime_secs`), the * value is the time in Unix time in seconds. If the * precision is not enough for the value to fit, `lg_floor` * will return `lg_error` and set `*tb` to `tb` plus `c`. **

This function is similar to strftime(), except that it produces * more compact timestamps than strftime() for values in the range * ` -722222222...722222222`, ` -3600...3600`, and ` -86400...86400`.  It matches strftime() perfectly if no precision is specified; *

otherwise, the precision is the same as if `strftime()` had been * passed the same format string. */ int lg_stristr(time_t *tb, const char *string, const struct tm tm) { char format[80]; int lg_cf; int pl_fl; if (!tm) tm = gmtime(&tb->timestamp); strftime(format, 80, "%Y%m%d%H%M%S", tm); / Check for both negative and positive values. */ if (tm->tm_year
