Technology Technology The key to the future is the effort of an IT team with an operating system (ITOS) that suits the demands and standards of digital networks. The Commission's ITOS includes a modern hardware solution, according to the requirements of the network base. In the first place, this should be a network that supports the high speeds needed for these services. In the second place, it requires flexible, competitive solutions to cost efficiently and effectively handle the growth and needs of services, reflecting both existing and future needs. The information system is the core of the IT solution. The key part of the information system is the application and middleware system, which should be designed to allow the Service Provider and operators to make use of all the features and functions of the new network. The operating system thus needs to be used in a flexible way in order to both meet current demands and also provide the basis for future developments. The three parties in the network platform should handle tasks based on the new standards in areas such as IP/MPLS, IP-based transport, IP-based application and middleware, IP-based service applications and Service Management, as well as the basic support needed for new services. It should also work together with the new platforms and supporting applications in order to provide all the information needed to support the new services. In order to understand the impact of new network and services on the data
