I want to decompress it into a byte array. However, it seems that the standard.NET solution is to read it as a byte array from the beginning and then write each byte to the array, from the end. Is there any option to do this in a better way? A: Yes there is, but you have to be really careful about memory management, and you have to be very clear about what you're doing. First of all, you have to allocate an array of the exact size that you're about to write into: `byte[] myByteArray = new byte[myMP3String.Length];` Then you can iterate through the MP3 string and use the data stored in myByteArray as if it was another array: `for (int byteIndex = 0; byteIndex < myMP3String.Length; byteIndex++) { myByteArray[byteIndex] = myMP3String[byteIndex]; }` ["Taran"], "last_update": { "timestamp": 1573909761 }, "recommendation": "@recomm 6d1f23a050
