UVR affects human skin in two ways. First, UVR causes direct damage to the DNA of cells, DNA is the molecule which carries hereditary information. Damage to DNA causes mutations, and if these cause the cells to develop abnormally, they become cancerous. Another way UVR affects human skin is by causing a range of changes in the cells, which can lead to conditions like sunburn, hyperpigmentation or even early signs of skin cancer. Fortunately, you can reduce your risk of developing skin cancer by spending time in the sun without being exposed to too much UVR. To reduce your exposure to UVR, it's best to spend time in the shade, use sunscreen with an
