10.7 percent share of China's search market, and now it's making heavy acquisitions, like this one. Data from the Internet analytics firm comScore, based in San Francisco, indicates that Face.com already has more than 63 million unique Chinese users, who click on ads and other content available on the site. Face.com said Wednesday that it was planning to use these new resources to expand its service to the rest of Asia. The news comes at a time when Baidu, which describes itself as the Internet equivalent of Google in China, is trying to fend off a challenge from Western search engines like Google,
