Three women are looking to become the first in United States history to have their womb transplants. They'll be facing a pretty big hurdle—they're only eligible for the procedure if they're already pregnant. The three women, who have all given birth, are in the middle of their third rounds of in vitro fertilization (IVF) treatment, and are currently waiting to become pregnant with the help of a donated womb. But the operation is a long one, and pregnancy can take several months. "You will be a patient for weeks, months or even years," according to University of Maryland Medical Center's Reproductive Endocrinology and Infertility Center—these transplants have a success rate of only five percent. And who's paying for all this? The hospital is considering asking patients to chip in $87,000 in fees, a consideration that didn't go over well with one of the women who turned down the procedure, 42-year-old Shannon Stagliano. "She has good family support and she wants to be a mother," Stagliano's wife, Tara Stagliano, told ABC 7 in New York. "It's nice to be able to have that option and not to have to
