Defoe, 32, returned to Tottenham earlier this season after three seasons in Major League Soccer and revealed he would have no problem with a move to either the Bundesliga or Serie A, with former club Rangers also plying their trade in Italy. But Defoe, one of the game's true cult heroes despite struggling to break into the United States, warned he would not leave England's top flight if he were to slip down the divisions as a free agent. "Champions League, I'm telling you," Defoe told the Daily Express when asked about his dream destination. "If I was on a free transfer, I would go to the biggest team in the world. I know I'm not the best player in the world and I've always been proud of President Donald Trump on Friday awarded the Navy the long-awaited contract for three Ford-class nuclear-powered attack submarines — but as yet, the price tag and specifics of the deal remain murky. Trump has long been a fan of the Navy's Next Generation Nuclear Powered Attack submarine program, but the White House announced Friday that he has issued a single-page, unsigned document to the Navy for a contract worth "not less than" $8.6 billion. The document does not provide details for the three vessels to be built, other than that they will "be capable of attacking surface ships, submarines, or air targets in the littoral or high seas region." The Navy has long planned to have 10 of the boats in operation by 2040. Trump also said the document contained "information on the layup and reactivation of the first production lot of the program" — a reference to the Navy's plans to start building the first of the boats in 2027. "The contract will be awarded to the responsible contractor(s) on or before April 15, 2018, and all work will be performed in the United States," the document states. The Navy and Defense Department did not respond to a request for comment. The Navy has been quietly planning to award a contract for the next three boats for months. The current design has a budget estimate of more than $13 billion. But the deal has been an unsteady one due to high costs of the construction and the short time frame to get the first boat built and delivered. In addition, the Navy is still working to find a builder to house the submarine in its builder's yard in Louisiana before construction starts, as the boat's estimated price tag continues to climb.
