My son is sharing space with another child and it's a bit of a challenge to manage, but it's OK. I've been reading a lot about things we can do to make this easier for both children - and I'm seriously considering signing our son up for some extra time at school next year. This will hopefully give him more opportunity to develop friendships with the other children in his class and enjoy some more extended time with his teacher. I've also started reading the homeschooling books and blogs of other people who seem to be much more successful in homeschooling than me. They live in the same city as us, so that's a bonus! Their children are much more independent, and they seem to have a much greater success at it. I want to be able to say: "Homeschooling is actually easy!" because that would make my life a lot easier and my son would be able to succeed because he would be thinking about his own future, rather than feeling like he has to endure a difficult childhood because he was raised by me. It's been hard. Really hard. Because of that, I've been reconsidering just how we are homeschooling, and am finding I have a lot of ideas and opinions about it and I don't want to get stuck in a rut. I want to be flexible and evolve our homeschooling, because I feel I'm missing out on so much by not having time for friends and other activities.
